Marker-Assisted Plant Breeding: Principles and Practices ... In this article, we will address general principles and methodologies of marker-assisted breeding in plants and discuss some issues related to the procedures and applications of this methodology in practical breeding, including marker-assisted selection, marker-based backcrossing, marker-based pyramiding of multiple genes, etc., beginning with a brief introduction to molecular markers as a powerful tool for plant breeding. Molecular Markers and Marker-Assisted Breeding in Plants enhance the efficiency of breeding programs through their use in marker-assisted selection (MAS). In this way, the selection of target traits can be achieved indirectly using molecular markers that are closely linked to underlying genes or that have been developed from the actual gene sequences. More specifically, plant breeding will Marker-Assisted Selection in Plant Breeding: From ... Marker assisted selection has revolutionized the field of plant breeding and genetics. DNA markers are short sequences of DNA having known location in chromosome. These markers are generally originated by genetic variations and mutations. Marker
